Editorial Review

About the Author

David Foster spends much of his trekking time checking out the flora and impressing others with his skill in building campfires and driftwood furniture. When not chasing critters out of his backpack, David, a retired teacher-librarian, classifies his collection of mosses in his Japanese shade garden.

Wayne Aitken is frequently seen with his face in campfire smoke, tearfully preparing his culinary delights. His greatest pleasure is to follow his co-author Dave Foster's footsteps (particularly on sandy beaches). Between treks, Wayne tries desperately to keep his management consulting company afloat.
