Editorial Review

From Library Journal

Judith Whale provides an emotionally restrained and somewhat formal narration of Brookner's (Altered States, Audio Reviews, LJ 9/1/97) perceptive novel. Working at a London medical library, Judith Hinton is intrigued by Nick and Alix: he is a doctor who often uses the library, and she is his cultured wife who lets everyone know that she has "come down in the world." Judith is dazzled when they take her into their circle. She sees herself as an observant writer until she falls out of favor with the couple and their friends. Ultimately, this reading is uninvolved, perhaps because so many of the characters are tiresome. One wonders why Judith doesn't see through them. For larger collections. ?Melody A.
