Editorial Review

From Publishers Weekly

Those looking for history in their Regency may have to settle for sex in Jordan's followup to The Seduction. When her bookish and noble fianc and lifelong friend, Geoffrey, Earl of March, is lost at sea, Lady Aurora Demming, daughter of the powerful duke of Eversley, believes she has lost her only chance to be free of her abusive father. Da fear intensified by his having arranged a marriage for her with a controlling man twice her age. An opportunity for freedom arises when Nicholas Sabine, an American about to be hanged for murder and piracy, asks her to marry him for just one day and one tempestuous night. His money will give her independence, while her title will enable her to guarantee that Nicholas's raven-haired half-sister Da love child born out of wedlock D will be accepted by British high society. Aurora's new life as a London widow and the guardian of her new ward is shattered when Nicholas appears at a masquerade ball, explaining how he escaped death and desiring to claim her publicly as his wife. Although she is desperately attracted to him, Aurora fears marriage to a man so passionate D about danger, life and love D will trap her as completely as did life with her father. Just as Nicholas seems to be persuading her of their mutual love and rightness for each other, the long-lost fianc turns up, obviously not drowned at all. Jordan aptly maintains the tension between Aurora and Nicholas, while moving the plot smartly along with lively dialogue and interesting secondary characters. (Nov.)

From the Author

Welcome to my "Notorious" world....

THE PASSION is the second book of my new "Notorious" Series -- all scorching-hot tales of dangerous rakes and bold adventurers during the Regency era.

Can passion of the flesh lead to passion of the heart? That's the fascinating question I set out to explore in THE PASSION. An aristocratic English beauty makes a desperate marriage with a notorious American adventurer and experiences a stunning sexual and emotional awakening. But will she abandon her safe, comfortable world to risk loving a dangerous man? Will he give up his much-cherished freedom to claim her heart? Can passion lead to a love so powerful, it becomes a commitment for all time?
