Editorial Review

Review

"This chapter [Chapter 9] was an excellent resource for my students and was the foundation of the final weeks of class. In particular, students were able to use elements of each of the sample plans to develop their own individual units for presentation.

"The entire class found it [Chapter 7] refreshing and applauded the author for promoting her position in "Reflections about Reaching All Learners" that "the vast majority of students have the capacity to develop the learning skills necessary to succeed in school."

Rick Gay, Davidson College

"I can say her [Bennett's] approach to Multicultural/Diversity Education instruction is very informative and helpful for teachers of diverse students. The examples and cases are students' favorites. The quality of the information presented [in this text] is excellent."

Henry M. Codjoe, Dalton State College

"She [Bennett] starts out with a strong presentation of a theoretical framework. I find her case examples very compelling. I especially like the many examples of lesson plans found in Chapter 9. I like the emphasis placed on ethnic and national groups covered in Part II. Other texts don't cover this topic to the extent that this text does. I would be very inclined to try the Bennett text the next time I teach our multicultural education class. I particularly like her treatment of immigration and how it has impacted our nation and our schools."

Richard Orem, Northern Illinois University

"I appreciated the depth of materials covered in this text, especially the argument for the need for multicultural education. More areas of diversity were covered than is found in most texts of this nature. Overall, the writing style is great. It is easy to read, has a narrative feel."

Anita Jones Thomas, Loyola University - Chicago
